Governor Sam Brownback is leading the charge in a state-wide challenge to become more energy efficient. The Take Charge Challenge is a program to raise awareness about sensible ways save energy around the home.

During a press conference at Cedar Crest this afternoon, Brownback demonstrated several simple ways to save electricity and seal leaks against the cold.

Sixteen cities in four regions of Kansas will compete to see which community can save the most energy and bring home a renewable energy or energy efficiency project valued at 100-thousand dollars.

The take charge challenge is put on by the Climate and Energy project in partnership with the Kansas Energy Office.
